【４】[Answer]の書き換え：

I disagree with the opinion that more needs to be done to improve public safety. I have two reasons to support this based on crime and technology. Firstly, the number of physical crimes in public places is decreasing as more crimes shift to the internet. Although it is challenging to reduce online crimes, the focus should instead be on addressing these internet-related crimes. Secondly, thanks to technological advancements, people can live more safely in public places. The more we improve vehicle technologies, the more car accidents significantly decrease. Therefore, technological development contributes to improved public safety. In conclusion, due to the changing nature of crime and improving technology, I believe our focus should shift rather than increasing efforts on traditional public safety measures.

【５】模範解答：

Agree:
I agree that more needs to be done to improve public safety, and this belief is primarily based on the issues of accidents and crime. Firstly, while technology has helped reduce the number of accidents, many still occur due to human error or lack of proper safety measures. Stricter regulations and better education about safety can help prevent these accidents. Secondly, despite decreasing crime rates in public places, crime has moved into the digital realm. Cybercrime is an increasing threat to public safety, and more resources should be devoted to combatting this issue. In conclusion, considering the ongoing issues of accidents and the rise of cybercrime, more efforts should undoubtedly be devoted to improving public safety. (126 words)

Disagree:
I disagree that more needs to be done to improve public safety. My argument centers on technology and food safety. Firstly, technology advancements, particularly in areas such as surveillance and AI, have substantially improved public safety, reducing the urgency for additional efforts. Secondly, regarding food safety, rigorous standards and stringent checks have significantly reduced risks associated with food consumption. Therefore, it might be more beneficial to focus on other pressing issues that demand our attention. In conclusion, due to the advancements in technology and robust food safety measures already in place, there is no pressing need to focus more on improving public safety. (130 words)

I disagree with the opinion that more needs to be done to improve public safety. I have two reasons to support this based on crime and technology.
Firstly, the number of crimes at public places is decreasing because there has been a significant increase in online crimes in recent years. It is difficult to reduce crimes on the internet. Therefore, people should focus on diminishing internet crimes.
Secondly, thanks to the improvements of technology, people can spend their lives safely in public places. Especially, as cars improve these technologies, car accidents rapidly decrease.
For these reasons, the development of technology leads to improved public safety.
In conclusion, due to the increase in various types of crimes and improving technology, it is not effective to improve public safety anymore.

Instead of focusing on further improvements in public safety, resources should be allocated to tackle new and emerging threats, such as cybercrime and online harassment.
