Class _____ No. _____ Name _____

① It is four in the morning on April 25. The streets are dark and cold, but people are walking quietly to a war memorial. Some are old soldiers, and some are small children with their parents. This is Anzac Day in Australia and New Zealand.

④ In the afternoon, the mood changes a little. Friends meet and share stories about their grandparents. Some play two-up, a game with two coins from the war years. At home, families bake Anzac biscuits with oats and golden syrup. In shops, you must not call them cookies!
