

One Day, Two Names

Class _____ No. _____ Name _____

① On the second Monday in October, some Americans celebrate Columbus Day. Others celebrate Indigenous Peoples' Day. Some towns even celebrate both. Why does one day have two names? The answer starts with a trip across the ocean more than 500 years ago.

② In 1492, Christopher Columbus sailed west from Spain with three ships. He wanted to reach Asia, and he hoped to find Japan. On October 12, he landed on a small island in the Caribbean Sea. He thought he was near India, so he called the people there Indians. He did not know that two large continents were in his way.

④ But Columbus did not find an empty land. Millions of people already lived in the Americas. Under Columbus, many of them were made slaves, and new diseases killed many more. In 1992, exactly 500 years after his trip, the city of Berkeley chose a new name. It called the day Indigenous Peoples' Day. Today, the two names show two ways of looking at the same history. Which name would you choose?
