Class _____ No. _____ Name _____

① On July 20, 1958, a doctor in Paraguay had dinner with some friends. His name was Ramón Artemio Bracho. That night, he had a big idea: a day for friendship around the world. His group started to celebrate on July 30. They wanted people to be friends across all borders.

④ Today, people send messages, give small gifts, and eat together with their friends. In 2005, so many people in Argentina sent messages that phone networks stopped in four cities. You do not need a big party, though. A short message to an old friend is a great way to celebrate.
